

Native American Education

South Dakota is home to nine Native American tribes. All of these trace their roots to the OCETI SAKOWIN. Historically, this alliance consisted of the Santee, Yankton and Teton. Each spoke a different dialect – Dakota, Nakota or Lakota – of the same language.

Cultural traditions influence the way Native American students learn. From family structures to spirituality, the Dakota, Nakota and Lakota people have a rich and colorful culture – one that enriches the past, present and future of South Dakota.

South Dakota Tribes

Nine tribal governments operate within South Dakota. Each tribe elects its own chairperson and council members. A list of the nine tribes, along with their headquarters, appears below.

- Cheyenne River Sioux Tribe, Eagle Butte
- Crow Creek Sioux Tribe, Ft. Thompson
- Flandreau Santee Sioux Tribe, Flandreau
- Lower Brule Sioux Tribe, Lower Brule
- Oglala Sioux Tribe, Pine Ridge
- Rosebud Sioux Tribe, Rosebud
- Sisseton-Wahpeton Oyate, Agency Village
- Standing Rock Sioux Tribe, Ft. Yates, N.D.
- Yankton Sioux Tribe, Wagner

Just the Numbers

During the 2009-10 school year, 14,269 Native American students were enrolled in public school districts across South Dakota. That's about 11 percent of the student population. In addition, Native American students were enrolled in non-public, Bureau of Indian Education and tribal schools. A listing of these schools appears on the back of this sheet.

Enrollment by School Type

Commitment to Indian Education

The South Dakota Department of Education is dedicated to increasing educational outcomes for American Indian students. The department works closely with the Indian Education Advisory Council to build partnerships with South Dakota tribes and schools serving American Indian students. The council also advocates for a culturally relevant, results-oriented education experience for American Indian students.

Gearing Up for Graduation

The Department of Education and its partner, the Oceti Sakowin Educational Consortium, received a grant to address the graduation rate of Native American students, for GEAR UP (Gaining Early Awareness and Readiness for Undergraduate Programs).

Awarded in 2005, this federally funded, six-year, $6.9 million matching grant funds project "GEAR UP," an intensive effort designed to encourage more Native American youth to graduate from high school and pursue higher education. The project includes a rigorous academic component, as well as social and emotional support for students and their families. The program begins working with students in the 7th grade and follows them through high school. Through Summer School Academies, the students spend an extended period of time taking classes and living on college campuses here in South Dakota.

Grant Objectives

- Increase the academic performance and preparation for postsecondary education of participating students.
- Increase the rate of high school graduation and participation in postsecondary education of participating students.
- Increase the educational expectations of participating students and families, by expanding their knowledge of postsecondary education options, preparation and financial aid.
- Strengthen educational resources and postsecondary infrastructure at South Dakota's GEAR UP schools.
